Vitamins and minerals

B-Vitamin

The outside often reflects how we feel on the inside, a dog with a shiny coat signals well-being. Your dog may need extra support during different situations and periods in life, such as shedding and changing coat when additional B vitamins can provide extra support.

During periods of extra strain, vitamin B may help your dog. B-vitamins are recommended for dogs who are active and train regularly, are pregnant or lactating, have a decreased coat quality or during shedding.

When does my dog need a supplement of B vitamins?

There are eight different types of vitamin B, which all play a crucial role in the dog's body, i.e. for energy and protein metabolism, the nervous system, and quality of skin and coat. For example, Thiamin (B1) is important for the dog's metabolism and can contribute to increased appetite. Niacin (B3) is important for the conversion of energy and protein, and Folic acid (B9) is important for building DNA and RNA. Extra supplement of B vitamin is especially appropriate for bitches before mating and during gestation. Vitamin B can also be appropriate for a hard working dog, during shedding, and during stressful situations such as change of environment.

Gastrointestinal

A dog with an upset stomach?

By helping your dog maintain a healthy gastrointestinal tract you improve the dog's overall health. The gastrointestinal tract holds the body's largest group of immune cells. In the digestive system the small intestine is of extra importance, namely because vitamins, minerals, proteins, carbohydrates and fats are absorbed there. The small intestine is covered with cells helping the metabolism, and a microflora of good bacteria. Both pre- and probiotics can help the dog to a balanced microflora, better digestion and a stable pH that inhibits the development of toxic bacteria. By providing a supplement with prebiotics you are helping the dogs good microflora which gives a healthy stomach, a strong immune system and a optimal nutrient intake.

What is collagen?

Collagen is in fact a group of different proteins. Today there are 28 different collagens identified, but the ones we know most about are collagens 1-4. Collagen is the most commonly existing protein in the dog's body, and also in the joints. Therefore collagen is a crucial component for proper joint function.

When collagen enters the body it breaks down into peptides which are transported to the body part that is most in need. Collagen is used for e.g. building cartilage, tendons and ligaments. Hydrolyzed collagen is already broken-down into collagen peptides and supplies the dog with complete building blocks necessary for joints, ligaments, and tendons.

Temperament & Performance

TEMPERAMENT

MaxRelax

Effective and appreciated supplement that can ease stress reactions and help the dog regain focus and concentration more quickly.

MaxRelax contains tryptophan, thiamine and magnesium, substances that the dog needs to be able to relax and deal with anxious situations. MaxRelax can be added as a daily supplement or in connection with anticipated stressful situations such as travel, competitions, fireworks, loud sounds or change of environment. MaxRelax is a appreciated supplement by dog owners in all categories.

"Charlie has always been stressed and had difficulty meeting dogs. Since we started using MaxRelax, the walks have become calmer and it has become easier to reach him and break his unwanted behavior."

- Maria, owner to Charlie, labrador 4 years

Dog and stress

A fairly common problem is that dogs become stressed, nervous and unfocused. Stress is a chemical reaction, created by a variety of hormone secretions. To regulate stress, it is necessary for the body to create the balancing hormones serotonin and melatonin. For that, the body needs tryptophan, thiamine and magnesium, either through the feed or supplement.

Energy Booster

An extra boost of energy when needed. The natural choice for the high-performing dog

- An energy boost with MCT and CLA oils
- Energy Booster adds easily accessible energy and optimises the body's fat burning through the CLA oils
- Supply in connection with competition for an extra boost of energy when it is needed the most

ReHydrate

For efficient recovery during warm days

- For maintaining fluid- and electrolyte balance
- Easily dissolves in the dog's drinking water

What is MCT and CLA oil?

MCT is short for Medium Chain Triglycerides, i.e. oil chains shorter than those found in "regular" oil. The advantage of MCT oil is that it is more easily absorbed by the body's cells and transforms quickly to usable energy.

CLA oil is short for Conjugated Linoleic Acid, fatty acids optimizing the body's fat burning. Due to the combination of MCT and CLA oils, Energy Booster adds energy and stamina when needed the most.
